An Evening with Robert Kelley

Don’t miss the PAHA Annual Dinner Program, “An Evening with Robert Kelley.”

Robert Kelley, the Artistic Director of TheatreWorks, is a local product who attended Jordan, Paly, and Stanford. He demonstrated his love for the theatre by acting in plays at Palo Alto’s Children’s Theatre from the age of nine. He went on to found TheatreWorks in 1970 and has overseen its growth to become one of America’s most important national theaters. His endeavor began with a motivation to reach out to young people, and today TheatreWorks Education Programs reach over 25,000 students each year, offering a variety of programs to camps, classes, school groups, and special matinée performances. Since the 1970s, his commitment has consistently been to excellence, diversity, creativity, and innovation.

TheatreWorks now boasts 8,000 subscribers, and Kelley monitors a budget of over $8 million. His peers in Silicon Valley’s world of theatre have recognized his contributions and dedication with a myriad of awards: the Silicon Valley Arts Council’s Legacy Laureate Award, the Bay Area Theatre Critics Circle Paine Knickerbocker Award for lifetime achievement, nine Theatre Critics Circle Awards, and two Back Stage West Garland Awards for Outstanding Direction.

On Kelley’s watch, TheatreWorks has launched more than 100 new plays and musicals, including the world premiere of the Tony-winning Memphis in 2010. He directed the world premiere of Jane Austen’s Emma in 2007 and its “matchless reprise” in 2015-2016. This lively musical became TheatreWorks’ beloved and highest grossing production. From the outset, the company produced wholly original works and in the early days performed wherever it could find space—a garage, a basement, an outdoor park. Even then, its production values were extraordinary, with sets and costumes that far surpassed its limited budget. Now, the group performs at the Lucie Stern Theatre complex and the Mountain View Center for the Performing Arts.

Under Kelley’s stewardship, TheatreWorks has increased its focus on new material and new authors. Always on the cutting edge, Kelley’s company has attracted the highest caliber of performers, including those of color. In 1981, The Fireworks Rag was the company’s first primarily African-American production.

Kelley has consistently given his audiences high value, interesting diversity, and timely relevance in the productions and in their casts. This summer, TheatreWorks will offer the world premiere of the “high stakes political drama,” Confederates. Don’t miss it.
The Children’s Theatre: A Stage for All Ages

Palo Alto has maintained its excellent cultural and recreational facilities for almost a century.

Key among them are Rinconada Park and the Lucie Stern Community Center. Established in 1922 and comprising 19 acres, Rinconada is Palo Alto’s second oldest park, complete with tennis courts, swimming pool, and play structures, and is adjacent to the Junior Museum. The Lucie Stern Community Center was designed by Palo Alto’s own Birge Clark in his signature Spanish-Mediterranean style.

It included not one but two theaters when it was built in 1935. Over the years, the main theater has been home to a number of dramatic presentations, some of which included prominent Palo Alto citizens as producers and actors. Among them was Egerton Lakin, a founder of the law firm of Lakin Spears. The Children’s Theatre has been a source of joy and inspiration for youth since its inception. One PAHA member, Patty McEwen, acted in the first plays after the Children’s Theatre opened under the direction of Hazel Robinson. A PAHA Board member, Pat Briggs, directed the Children’s Theatre for many years, including the period when my children were growing up. The main theater grew to host several excellent companies, among them Palo Alto Players, West Bay Opera and TheatreWorks. The long and remarkable history of TheatreWorks is the subject of our annual dinner presentation on June 8 (described in this issue, reservation enclosed). It was an amazing stroke of good fortune that Lucie Stern recognized the need for this remarkable facility that has enriched the lives of so many over the years.

Earn Your Junior Historian Badge!

You do not need to be a war hero or saint to earn the “PAHA Junior Historian” badge. Pat Briggs was awarded the first PAHA Junior Historian badge for her efforts in securing the speaker for the June dinner. Jim Lyons also received one for his ongoing efforts to add materials to the archives. As Steve Staiger and Jack Parkhouse note, “You can earn the badge simply by doing something helpful for the Association deemed worthy of the honor.” After talking about the need for some way to honor those who perform good deeds for the Association, Steve and Jack finally got their act together and, voilà, the badges. With help from the people at Omega Printing, a number of design options were considered, and after the final was decided on, Omega arranged for production of the badges. Steve and Jack will continue to keep their eye out for others who should be honored, but feel free to let them know if you think of someone who is deserving of recognition.

Last chance to RSVP for PAHA’s Annual Dinner!

Myron Freedman, the Palo Alto History Museum’s first full-time Executive Director, offers an update on plans for the Museum, including the exciting news that construction may begin soon.

Freedman quotes architect Daniel Burnham’s 1891 remark, “Make no little plans. They have no magic to stir men’s blood.” At that time, Burnham was in the process of designing the Chicago World’s Fair and transforming Jackson Park into the White City.

Though more modest, the vision for the Palo Alto History Museum is both ambitious and inspiring. It begins with the renovation of Birge Clark’s historic, Spanish-style Roth Building, which housed the original Palo Alto Clinic. Vacant since the relocation of the Palo Alto Medical Foundation, the beautiful 1932 structure has been the focus of preservationists’ efforts to save it and infuse it with a second life as the community’s home for history, anchored by PAHA and its archives.

Freedman and his many supporters see the Museum as a cultural, educational, and historical resource, complete with galleries and interactive experiences that tell Palo Alto’s story. Visitors will return often to see changing exhibitions, attend programs, or utilize the Community Meeting Room. Eventually, a small café will offer refreshments to visitors.

The Museum will begin with Palo Alto today—a small city of 67,000—and its outsized impact on the world. Palo Alto’s phenomenal story puts it at the intersection for the creative people, organizations, and businesses that have come to define the meaning of innovation. Remarkable people such as William Shockley, Frederick Terman, Anna Zschokke, Jane and Leland Stanford, and Lucie Stern made choices and took actions that transformed the sleepy town, combined it with Mayfield, and linked it with Stanford. They and many others made a Palo Alto address an essential business decision in a start-up-mad world.

Freedman notes, “We have made enormous strides in the last six months to prepare the project for construction.” Plans were revised and submitted, reviewed, and approved by the city’s Historic Review Board and Architectural Review Board. The next step will be a review by the Building Department for construction permits. Freedman continues, “Our goal is to break ground this year. And of course we continue to raise funds. Since the project’s inception hundreds of people have shown support with a donation, and we are nearing the tipping point to put a shovel in the dirt and realize our ‘no little plans’.”

History Jaunts

It’s almost too late—but not quite—to experience and enjoy the “vast carpets of wildflowers” in Central and Northern California. Check out the websites of Briones Regional Park, Edgewood Park, Henry W. Coe State Park, Mount Diablo State Park, Picchetti Ranch Preserve, Pulgas Ridge, Russian Ridge Preserve, Tilden Regional Park. If you are willing to go farther afield, look at the websites of Carrizo Plain National Monument in San Luis Obispo County or Los Padres National Forest to see “chocolate lilies, scarlet Indian paintbrush, pitcher sage and purple shooting stars.” Put on your hiking boots, your sunscreen, and take your sunglasses.

¡Viva Baja! – Life on the Edge at the Monterey Bay Aquarium features six galleries showcasing the sea and land creatures of Baja California. “Two years in the making, this 7,000-square-foot exhibit frames a vast, tropical panorama” and fragile ecosystem. Visitors can stare “at the mesmerizing shimmer of shiny fish flashing through the azure depths” and “traipse through the…galleries teeming with…specimens from the scaly to the slithery.” The Monterey Bay Aquarium is located at 886 Cannery Row, Monterey. For more information, visit the website www.montereybayaquarium.org.

“A Universe of Maps” features an extraordinary selection of more than 150 rare and antiquarian maps, atlases, globes.
